06 Forgetting emotion

THE LOGO

A logo that tries to say everything

THE PROBLEM

Too many details, too much text, complex gradients... Many brands want their logo to 'tell the whole story' in one image. The result: it becomes illegible at small sizes (profile picture, stamp, label).

WHY IT COSTS YOU CLIENTS

A confusing logo looks amateurish and doesn't stick in the memory. If your audience can't identify it in a second, they won't remember you — and recognition is where trust begins.

The solution

Aim for simplicity: a logo must remain clean and recognisable even at 16 pixels. Test it at a tiny size and in black & white before signing off.

PRACTICAL TIP

Shrink your logo to app-icon size on your phone. If you can no longer recognise it, simplify it.

COLOURS

Colours chosen 'because we like them'

THE PROBLEM

Colours are chosen on personal taste, without logic, and change from one post to the next. Yet every colour sends an unconscious message: trust, luxury, energy, seriousness...

WHY IT COSTS YOU CLIENTS

Inconsistent colours muddle your image and send the wrong emotional signal. A wellness brand that uses aggressive colours, for example, drives people away before they even read the message.

The solution

Define a palette of 2–3 colours (one primary, one secondary, one neutral) and use them everywhere, without exception.

PRACTICAL TIP

Choose your colours based on the emotion you want to convey, not your personal preferences. Note their exact codes (e.g. var(--ds-accent)) so you never have to improvise.

CONSISTENCY

Changing style with every post

THE PROBLEM

One font here, a different filter there, a different layout every time. Every visual looks like it comes from a different brand.

WHY IT COSTS YOU CLIENTS

Without consistency, your audience won't recognise you in their feed. Repeating the same visual universe is exactly what creates the feeling of a 'serious, established brand'.

The solution

Create reusable templates: same fonts, same colours, same margins. You save time AND gain credibility.

PRACTICAL TIP

Look at your last 9 posts in grid view. If they don't look like one family, it's time to unify your style.

DIFFERENTIATION

Copying your competitors

THE PROBLEM

You look at what the 'market leader' does and imitate it, thinking it's a safe choice. You end up looking like everyone else.

WHY IT COSTS YOU CLIENTS

When all brands look the same, none stand out. You become interchangeable — and the client then chooses only on price. Your difference is your best selling argument.

The solution

Identify what makes you unique (your story, your tone, your speciality) and highlight it without hesitation.

PRACTICAL TIP

Complete this sentence: 'Unlike others, we...'. The answer is the heart of your positioning.

QUALITY

Neglecting the quality of visuals

THE PROBLEM

Blurry photos, pixelated screenshots, rushed edits. 'It'll do' ... but it never does.

WHY IT COSTS YOU CLIENTS

Clients judge the quality of your product or service by the quality of your images. A careless visual gives the impression of a careless offer — and creates doubt before the purchase.

The solution

Invest in polished, high-resolution visuals. It's your shop window: it works for you 24/7.

PRACTICAL TIP

Three excellent visuals are worth more than ten average ones. Quality always beats quantity.

EMOTION

Forgetting emotion and story

THE PROBLEM

Communication only talks about products, prices and features. No story, no emotion, no 'why'.

WHY IT COSTS YOU CLIENTS

People don't buy a product: they buy what it represents and how it makes them feel. A brand without a narrative stays cold and forgettable — and therefore easy to replace.

The solution

Tell the 'why' of your brand: its origin, its mission, the people behind it. That's what creates attachment.

PRACTICAL TIP

Share behind-the-scenes content regularly: the founder, the making-of, a happy client. Human stories create connection.

BRAND GUIDELINES

Having no written identity

THE PROBLEM

No document sets the rules of the brand. Every new visual, every new supplier starts from scratch and interprets things their own way.

WHY IT COSTS YOU CLIENTS

Without a framework, your image dilutes over time and loses its strength. You also waste precious time re-explaining your universe at every collaboration.

The solution

Create a mini brand guide: logo and variants, exact colours, fonts, tone of communication.

PRACTICAL TIP

Even a one-page guide is enough to start. The important thing is that it exists and that everyone follows it.
